

DISIDENTIFICATION. Not being tied down to one style. Not making oneself immediately recognizable by a particular use of material or a trademark. Undermining the quasi-metaphysical assertion of necessity in relation to a fixed technique or method by always presenting techniques and methods as contingent or as applying them only to that one specific constellation. Not handing over your ID. Denouncing identification.